

How Schools/Districts Can Support Staff Well-being

Audience(s): School staff (administrators, teachers, educational assistants, and all other district employees)

Hyperlink: How Schools & Districts Can Support Staff Well-being

Description

An infographic depicting different ways that schools and districts can support staff well-being, such as building positive relationships, fostering open communication and giving staff autonomy. Staff includes teachers, educational assistants, administrators and all other district employees.

Objective(s)

Staff well-being is an essential antecedent to student well-being. It is important that schools and districts take steps to reflect on their structures and practices to find ways that they can be more supportive of staff well-being.

Are there other resources that you love for cultivating the health of students and staff in your school community? Send your suggestions to dashbcresources@gmail.com